REPORT of Vocational Skill and Training

It is not enough to decide early that level of education, for the kind of education is also important. There is often a temptation to argue that because an economy faces persistent structural problems, it is best to promote vocational education. Foster (1988) pointed out the history in this sense. He argued that vocational education provided a human labourers. Labourers provide a welcome an effective method of transferring economic development. This was because general education was necessary foundation for vocational education, which should be closely linked with the non job training.

VOCATIONAL SKILL AND TRAINING

Vocational skill and training provides the workers' ability to acquire information and learn about the economic characteristics of all inputs in the process of production. Such information is important for performing each worker in agriculture or industry or anywhere else. Even highly routines operations including an ordinary awareness and appreciation of related information. In a dynamic technological setting, vocational training programmes for skill development can be used as an instrument to remove the gap between the new available technology and the men in use at that past at time.

“It is important to understand that training and education not only give different procedures, and delivers should draw a sharing destination between them. Training involves the development of specific skills, which are needed to perform a particular job or series of jobs. Education involves the acquisition of general knowledge and development of basic mental ability.”
